Kolkata: A senior Medical Supervisor in Jalpaiguri district's Ghugudanga area consumed poison and jumped into a well and committed suicide, following harassment by the local people over setting up of a COVID-19 swab testing lab and quarantine in the area. He died last night in the hospital.

Several incidents of harassment of frontline health workers has happened in the recent past across the country in the wake of COVID-19 outbreak.

The locals had objected to the idea of setting up the lab in the area and had allegedly pressurized on the person. An elderly citizen, the supervisor was scheduled to retire in September this year.

In a two-page suicide note, Debasish Chakrabarty has elaborately mentioned how he was harassed and pressurized by the locals, asking him not to allow COVID-19 swab test centre. Being a local resident of the area, he was mentally dejected over the matter and jumped into a well inside his residential premises. The neighbours rushed him to the hospital. He breathed his last on Wednesday night.

Debasish Chakrabarty's younger brother Ranjan Chakrabarty said, "My elder brother had consumed poison and then jumped into the well on Tuesday night. Then locals came and admitted him to Jalpaiguri sub-divisional Hospital."

He was posted in Ghugudanga area's Berbari as Health Supervisor. He was in-charge of restricting COVID-19 spread and thus was responsible for setting up a swab testing lab and quarantine centre. The locals were opposed to the idea and had submitted a memorandum also.
